

Maureen loves God, experiences Jesus regularly and enjoys her Catholic faith

She is a person others turn to with questions about faith and God and the Church.

Her reaction to these questions has evolved over the years from frustration and impatience to acceptance and loving counsel

She wants to bring others into the faith through her example

Maureen at a Glance

Meet Maureen...

- Maureen is 47, married and has one child who recently started her first job and has moved out of state. She has always valued her Catholic faith and her relationship with God. While she has had periods of her life where she felt more distant from him – when she was in college or when her husband lost his job – she has never doubted that Jesus is there for her and helping her every day
- Maureen is one of those friends that people ask religious questions. “How did you first know God exists?” “How often do you pray?” “Do you really feel Jesus around you?” “Why are you Catholic?”
- She often looks back at how she’s responded to people’s questions in the past and regrets her answers. Often, she fears she came off as impatient or frustrated with family and friends who weren’t in the same faith place she was.
- Now, she’s taken a different approach, realizing that everyone is different and as long as a person is questioning, they are on their own journey, which is a wonderful thing.
- She hopes to live the example of Christ and be Christ for others. She goes to Mass and would invite anyone to attend with her. She also loves the Sacraments and the way they bring her closer to Christ. Honestly, she can’t imagine life without her parish, where she volunteers, and is a lector.
