

Nancy is always searching for more information and motivation to connect to Christ

She wants the Bible to be more a part of her daily life

Creating a connection to Jesus for her children is important to her

She may attend a new church because she misses the excitement she craves while she's at Mass

Nancy at a Glance

MEET NANCY...

- Nancy was invited to a non-Catholic Bible study by a close friend a few months ago. She said no at first but then decided to attend because she's always wanted to learn more about the Bible. Catholics don't spend as much time with the Bible as she'd like.
- Nancy is married with three kids. Her oldest is in elementary school, and she has a toddler and a baby at home. She is motivated to instill faith in them and has been reading books and blogs about how to create connections with God in your children.
- After attending the Bible study for the first time, she came away energized and excited about what Jesus can mean in her daily life. She went to Mass on Sunday hoping that her emotions would become even greater, but she left feeling confused because Mass made her feel less connected to Christ. The priest just doesn't seem to have the same excitement about God as she does.
- She is seriously considering going to services with her Bible study friend. She loves her church and is part of a mom's group and a book club. And, they have children's programs for kids of all ages. Jesus seems to be a part of all their lives.
- If she decided to switch churches, her husband would probably go with her, too. It would be best for the kids, and that is what matters most to them both.